Who we are

The Sexual Assault Response Team (SART) is a multidisciplinary, interagency group of professionals, established to work alongside victims of sexual violence to provide a response that is sensitive, holistic and timely.

The specialist team comprises Social Workers from the Sexual Assault Support Service, Detectives from the Child Abuse & Sexual Crimes Unit, Nurse Examiners from the Clinical Forensic Medicine Unit, and Medical and Allied Health staff from the Townsville Hospital and Health Service.

What we do

The SART model uses a team approach to provide a coordinated, wrap-a-round, 24-hour support service for victims of sexual assault that reflect Queensland Government Interagency Guidelines.

The services provided by SART are free and confidential to all victims, and span psychological, general and forensic medical, and criminal reporting and court support needs, as requested.

Our key commitments

The Queensland Government Interagency Guidelines (2014) clearly articulate the urgent need for both greater service coordination, and specialist sexual assault support at the time of crisis. These identified needs provide the focus and commitment of SART to our community.

Interagency collaboration in service delivery

As a direct consequence of the complex nature of sexual assault, victims commonly interact with a number of different organisations. In this context, the SART team is committed to collaborative work, holistic approaches, and ultimately to ensuring all victims are afforded coordinated service provision.

Access to specialised crisis support

The trauma associated with sexual violence, and the possible longer term impacts for survivors, necessitate specialist and timely support. The SART team is committed to ensuring all victims of sexual violence are afforded support at the time of crisis, and consequently provides a 24 hour service to the community.

Trauma and violence informed care

A trauma and violence informed framework provides the foundations for the SART team, ensuring victims of sexual assault, remain at the very centre of the work that we do.

SART recognises the rights of individuals, and the importance of ensuring their safety, prioritising their choices, and empowering them to regain control over their bodies and their lives.

More broadly, SART aims to represent a model of best practice through cooperative working relationships, integrated care, reflective practice, and the ongoing development of a strong evidence base.
